Abstract

Signalling System in a Signalling Point

Loops via which a signalling point communicates with itself are advantageous for solving various problems. According to the invention, a loop is 5   enabled by a link that is returned in a loop from a signalling point to the same signalling point and to which two different signalling network identities are allocated at the output and input side.

Figure 5